WHAT IS THE LAPJ?

The Latin America Policy Journal (LAPJ) is a student-led publication at the Harvard John F. Kennedy School of Government (HKS) that brings together students, faculty members, policymakers, and practitioners, who share their views on the most pressing problems of the Americas. Discussion topics come from a variety of areas such as policy, economics, culture, development, politics, foreign affairs, among others. The LAPJ intends to start a spirited conversation between the Harvard community and key stakeholders in the region. We invite students to use the Journal as a window to express their opinions, advocate for their ideals, and learn from new and different perspectives.

WHAT IS THE PURPOSE OF OUR PUBLICATION?

The tenth edition of the LAPJ will focus on the notion of Recovery. The edition will seek how the region has faced the Covid-19 pandemic, the possible consequences and how will the recovery should be or what possibilities can it bring. We are accepting pieces that put the most outstanding policy and political dynamics observed in the region at the core of the analysis. Here is a suggested list of topics that we encourage you to consider when preparing your article:

1. Presidential Leadership, how to manage the recovery?
2. Macroeconomic planning
3. Sustainable Social Policy and Social Security Reform under Fiscal Consolidation
4. How to recover the year loss in education?
5. How will tourism recover?
6. What is the future of work?
7. Any topic related to the main topic

Note: the list above aims at providing some guidelines, it is non compulsory. Feel free to submit your proposal even if the subject of study doesn't fit in any of these categories.

The best pieces will be selected based on (i) the relevance of the topic; (ii) originality, sophistication, and style of the argument(s) and (iii) the contribution to scholarship and policy-making on Latin American issues.
